SITTING IN JUDGMENT ON SIR EDWARD CLARKE.

At a meeting of the City Conservative Association, held yesterday at Winchester House, to discuss a recent free trade vote in the House by Sir Edward Clarke (photograph by London Stereoscopic inset in top corner), it was proposed by Sir William Treloar (photograph inset in bottom corner), but not carried, that action should be postponed in view of Sir Edward's absence in Egypt. It was eventually decided that Sir Edward should be called upon to give the association a written explanation. On the right is a portrait of Sir John Puleston, who was in the chair.—(Specially taken by Daily Mirror staff photographer.)

FRESH OUTRAGES IN NATAL.

Loyal Chief Made Prisoner by His Deposed Kinsman.

INSULTS TO BRITAIN.

Rebels Ask 'Where Are Your Small White Men Now.'

A dangerous development of the troubles in Natal has taken place. Magwabaha, a newly ap-pointed Regent of a tribe in the Greytown district, noted for his loyalty to the Government, has been seized and made prisoner by the recently deposed chief, Bambaata

A force of 120 police has been dispatched to the mountainous country, in which, with his followers, Bambaata took refuge after his incursion.

Meanwhile the indignation of the colonists at the recent action of the Home Government is being freely expressed, and plain warnings are given as to the consequences of any further interference with the rights of the Natal authorities.

REGENT GOES TO CERTAIN DEATH.

DURBAN, Tuesday.—The deposed chief Bambaata, of the Greytown division, made an incursion last night into the location, and suddenly set upon the Regent, Magwabaha, who was taken, and is certain either to be assegaied or thrown from the rocks.

A strong force of police has been sent to search Bambaata.

A farmer states that last night Magwabaha's wife nocked at his door and told him that her hus-and was tied and carried away by Bambaata's men.

"Where are your small white men now?" they asked. "We swear by Cetywayo, not by your King," and threatened to dash the Regent's brains from the highest rocks.

REBEL'S HIGH LANGUAGE.

A logalist native says he heard Bambaata say to the Regent: "I will not let you, you dog, throw me from my chair. To-day when the sun is high, you will have to satisfy me who is chief." There is ample native confirmation for believing that Bambaata is moving in the vicinity of Impanza, twelve miles from Greytom, with an armed force. His following probably numbers a few hundreds—the seum of the country.

The Regent was meeting with success in reducing the tribe to order. It is urged that loyal chiefs should be strongly supported.—Laffan.

CLERGYMAN'S PROTEST.

DURBAN, Tuesday.—Such remarks as Mr. Mýer made in Parliament last night when he termed the Richmond executions "bloodsthirsty murders" are exasperating the feelings of the colonists, and are calculated to rankle and do an immense amount of harm.

The Rev. Mr. Wynne, a most respected ministry of the Wesleyan Church, speaking at Volksrust, said that he always avoided politics; but the occasion called so loudly that he dare not refuse to utter a protest against Natal's overwhelming. The Empire could not be built up when sun prejudices and misrepresentations ruled. He would be despondent but for his belief in the Divine over-ruling.—Laffan.

Ex-Ambassador's Wife Makes Public an Interesting Letter.

SINGULAR INTRIGUE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, Tuesday.—A remarkable sequel has arisen to the recall of Mr. Storer, the American Ambassador to Vienna. Many reasons have been given for this recall. One was that Mrs. Storer affected too regal a state, and received free-born daughters of the great Republic sitting on a raised dais like a most probable explanation, however, was that Mr. Storer had used President Roosevelt's name in his dealings with the Vatican relative to the selection of a second American Cardinal. That there was some intrigue of this kind is now Mrs. Storer writes to the "New York Herald" a remarkable letter, in which she places Mr. Roosevelt's relations with Roman Catholicism in an interesting light.

TO HELP THE GOVERNMENT.

TO HELP THE GOVERNMENT.

"In 1900," she says, "Theodore Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, wrote me a letter. It was written at the time of the conflict in the Catholic Church about the so-called 'Americanism' of Archbishop Ireland.

"This, elter was written to me that I might show it to Cardinal Rampolla, in order to convince the Vatican of the friendly attitude of prominent Americans towards Archbishop Ireland and his policy. It was all done to help our Government in its relations with the Philippines.

"I sent to Cardinal Rampolla only a copy of one-half of it, because (as can readily be seen) the latter half was purely personal."

In Mr. Roosevelt's letter, which is enclosed, he says:—

says:—
"I need not say what a pleasure it would be for me to do anything I can for Archbishop Ireland. You know how high a regard I have always felt for him. He represents the type of Catholicism which in my opinion must prevail in the United States if the Catholic Church is to attain its full measure of power and usefulness with our people and under our form of government.

PROBLEM OF PHILIPPINES.

PROBLEM OF PHILIPPINES.

"I absolutely agree with what Judge Taft says in his letter to you of March 20, in relation to that part of this problem which affects the Philippines. But the problem as a whole affects the United States as a whole. A reactionary or in any way anti-American spirit in ecclesiastical affairs would in America in the long run result in disaster just as certainly as a similar course in political affairs.

"I may add that the bigoted opponents of Catholicism are those who are most anxious to see the triumph within the ranks of Catholicism of this reactionary spirit and the throwing out of men who have shown a broad liberalism and Americanism in policy.

who have shown a broad liberalism and Americanism in policy.
"Of course, I feel that I am not justified in interfering in any way, directly or indirectly, with matters at the Vatican, but it is only fair, in response to your letter, that I should write you fully and frankly of my great appreciation of Archbishop Ireland and of my firm conviction that the real future of the Catholic, Church in America rests with those who in the main work along his lines.

BREEZY DOMESTIC NEWS

"You may be interested to know of the large percentage of Catholics, without exception men standing as high in capacity as in integrity, whom I have placed upon the various important commissions in this State."

Mr. Haldane replied that the court of inquiry had been constituted and would sit this week.

House of Commons yesterday, when he sough permission to bring in a Bill to license and regulate street betting.

"Many people," said Mr. Bottomley, "object to the recognition of betting by the State. In my opinion the State should restrict these transactions. Gambling is inherent in human nature. (Indignant cries of dissent.)

"We are all gamblers, and none more so than the average member of Parliament. To gamble may be a folly, but it is not a crime.

"There is no Biblical injunction against it, and eminent divines are divided in opinion as to its criminality." (Loud dissent.)

Workmen, the Bill assumed, would have some little excitement to relieve the humdrum monotony of life—some went in for street betting, some for street preaching, and others for drink.

On putting the question to the House "that leave given," hundreds of members orared, "No," only a few shouting for the "Ayes." The Speaker accordingly ruled that the "Noes had it," and this not being challenged by the "Ayes," the Bill was killed at its birth, amid wild cheers.

CLIENT'S REVENGE BY REVOLVER.

Solicitor Shot as He was Leaving the Town Hall.

DRAMATIC SCENE.

A remarkable affair occurred at the conclusion of the sitting of Grimsby County Court yesterday. Mr. John Barker, a well-known and much-respected solicitor, who is Clerk of the Peace for the borough, had been engaged the whole of the afternoon in a case at the court, and was just leaving the town hall when a man who had followed him out of the building suddenly produced a revolver and fired from behind.

Mr. Barker clapped his hand to his side and Mr. Barker clapped his hand to his side and turned upon his assailant, who was again levelling the revolver, and advanced towards him. "For God's sake, man, don't shoot again," the solicitor cried. The man did not heed the supplication, but pulled the trigger again.

There was a click, but this time the weapon apparently missed fire.

The whole incident had not occupied many seconds, and the police officers on duty outside the town hall immediately made a rush at the man.

Before they could reach him, however, he turned the revolver upon himself and discharged it, failing shot through the forehead into the arms of a police-constable.

A cursory examination of the assailant showed that the bullet had penetrated the skull, and was still embedded there.

still embedded there.

Subsequently the police ascertained that the assailant was an Isaac Swaby, a tailor. He is believed to have got into difficulties some little time ago, and had to abandon business.

Swaby had spent the afternoon in the county court, and for nearly three hours had sat quietly almost immediately behind Mr. Barker. When the Court rose Swaby waited in the town hall corrilor, and, as Mr. Barker left the building, he followed him down the town hall steps. He drew the revolver from his pocket, and, after firing at the solicitor, said, as he turned the weapon upon himself: "I meant to do for him—he ruined me."

said, as he turned the weapon upon himself: "I meant to do for him—he ruined me.".

Last night our correspondent had an interview with Mr. Barker, whose account differed slightly from that of an eye-witness. He stated that he was leaving the town hall with Mr. Wainwright, his managing clerk. He noticed Swaby standing on the town hall steps, and, he believed, nodded to him as he walked past.

A Marvellous Miss.

A Marvellous Miss.

He had got some few yards away from the building when he heard a loud report close behind him and simultaneously felt a blow as though delivered with a glenched fist in his back. He turned round quickly, and was confronted by Swaby, who was peering at him along the barrel of a revolver,

"I did not say anything at all to him," said Mr. Barker, but I ducked and dodged and beckoned to a policeman who was close by. Swaby did not speak either, but suddenly turned and walked a pace, and then fired again, this time at himself."

"I felt he pain in my back. Mr. Wainwright said I had not been hit because he felt the builtet whiz past him afterwards. I found I had been struck by something, possibly the wad, for there was a large bruise between my shoulder-blades."

So far as he knew, said Mr. Barker, Swaby had no grievance against him. He had acted for him in one or two little matters, but the man certainly had no reasonable ennity against him.

Inquiry at the hospital last night showed that the house surgeon had successfully extracted the bullet, and that Swaby's condition was not hopeless from a surgical point of view.

a remarkable suggestion to aid the Eton Work-house in getting rid of its plague of rats.

In a letter received by the workhouse master she stated that a mongoose had quite cleared the Bishop's palace of a similar plague.

Another extraordinary suggestion was the employment of a guinea-pig, which the writer-of-one of the letters said he had found most successful. Patent poison and trap vendors and professional rat-catchers galore offered their services, and the guardians left it to the master to make a choice.

FLATTERING MR. TREE.

How His Personality Impresses the Pupils of His School of Acting.

It was a bewildering afternoon that one spent at His Majesty's Theatre yesterday—at any rate, the earlier part of it. The pupils of Mr. Tree's dramatic academy were giving a performance in aid of the "Referee" Poor Children's Dinner Fund. It resolved itself into a series of imitations of Mr.

It was Antonio, in the trial scene from "The Merchant of Venice," who began it. He got Mr. Tree's voice exactly. Bassanio threw in a few Tree-like gestures. Shylock obliged with some Tree-like gestures. Shylock obliged with some clever facial impersonations of the producer of "Nero." Even Portia tried to show that she wasa true Twig, and rolled her eyes in the genuine His Majesty's manner.

The only one who really did not suggest Mr. Tree at all was the Duke of Venice. He sat in solitude, no one paying any attention to him, although he was supposed to be presiding at the trial. One could not imagine Mr. Tree putting up with that with that.

Next came an act of Mr. Pinero's play, "The Times." The only one who modelled himself on Mr. Tree in this was the gentleman who played Mr. Edward Terry's old part. But to make up we had a bunch of other imitations by the young ladies.

Miss Rose Hersee gave us Miss Fanny Brough Miss Gwendolen Williams hit off Miss Kate Serjeantson to the life. There was, however, a treat in store for those who stayed on. This was the performance of the wordless play, "L'Enfant Prodigue," for which the players had been coached by Mme. Cavallazzi. It really was a delight. All played exceedingly well in it, and Miss Mary Barton, the Young Pierrot, was quite remarkably good. Mr. Landon Ronald helped very much by his piano accompaniment to the dumb-show.

From Lynn's own story it appears that he does not remember dropping overboard, but remembers getting into the water. When he came to himself the vessel, he says, was about five miles away. He does not know how long he had been in the water, but states that he was picked up by a German fishing-boat and put on board a dredger and taken to Hamburg.

SIR EDWARD CLARKE, AMERICA AND PEERAGE.

Stormy City Meeting Passes a Strong Vote of Censure.

UNEXAMPLED SCENES.

With a degree of passion seldom equalled in Eng lish political life the City of London Conservative Association at Winchester House vesterday passed resolution calling on Sir Edward Clarke to ex plain his action in espousing free trade principle immediately after the general election, during which he supported Mr. Balfour's policy. Although the meeting was private the Daily Mirror was privileged, and on page I a photograph

The resolution, moved by Sir Joseph Lawrence and seconded by Mr. H. C. Gibbs, appeared to be scarcely sweeping enough to suit many of those present, but a small minority were opposed to any resolution of the kind, and it was their resistance which brought out the volcanic outburst of feeling which swept the meeting.

Orderly, but Ominous.

Orderly, but Ominous.

The resolution was: "That the City of London Conservative Association disapproves of Sir Edward Clarke's speech on March 12 attacking Mr. Balfour's policy, and of his action on March 13 in declining to vote with the leaders of the party, although present in the House, and they call upon Sir Edward Clarke to explain his action in writing to the chairman of this meeting as representing the association."

While the resolution was being moved and seconded the proceedings were orderly enough, applause, however, being given to every remark condemning Sir Edward's conduct, and referring to the duty of defending, the honour of public life. Sir William Treloar also was given a respectful hearing when he moved an amendment that nothing should be done until an opportunity has been afforded Sir Edward Clarke to be present at a meeting of the association to justify his speech in the House of Commons on March 12.

The Storm Breaks.

The Storm Broaks.

But the storm burst when one of Sir Edward's friends began to make a speech in his defence. His remarks were greeted with so much vociferous opposition that their meaning was to be gathered more from his gestures and the movement of his lips than by audible words.

He commenced, however, by reminding the meeting how greatly distressed Sir Edward Clarke must be by the worry and annoyance of this political crisis. He was understood to say that Sir Edward was worn thin by anniety, coupled with the ill-health through which he was passing. But should be a supported to the speaker's gallant effort.

That he had one or two friends in the room was evident, but they were only one or two. The speech roused most of the members to frenzy.

They rose from their seats, shouting and waving their arms like windmills. They yelled and bawled at the top of their voices, and for several minutes the room was a scene of wild confusion.

Sir John Puleston, the aged chairman, was quite unable to cope with the situation. He tried for a few minutes, and then sat down with an expression of hopelessness.

The resolution was passed with practical unannimity.

resolution was passed with practical unanimity.

In the opinion of many of the members interviewed at the close of the meeting, Sir Edward Clarke has only one course open to him—resignation. It is pointed out that it will be quite impossible for him to ignore a meeting thoroughly representative of the electors who gave him his seat.

Headmaster's Account of the Feeding of Underfed School-Children.

Yesterday a Select Committee of the House of Commons heard Mr. W. Hackman, headmaster of the Michael Faraday School, Walworth, tell his experience of the work of voluntary organisations in providing meals for necessitous school-children. Such an organisation, he said, was now working in Lambeth, and last year spent £500 on providing meals for poor children. In Walworth the crypt of a church—St. Peter's—had been fitted up, and every day 200 dinners were served in that crypt, while food was taken from the crypt to mission-halls and schools where other children received meals.

meals. The dinners consisted of a pint of soup—made from lentils, pease, haricot beans, rice, pearl barley, and substitutes for animal falts—a piece of whotement brend, and a piece of currant brend. He had noticed a distinct improvement in the children receiving these meals. The diet was purely vegetarian, but the children liked it, and it was found healthy.

PATHETIC PLEA FROM THE DOCK.

Mrs. Tewkesbury's Vain Appeal for Bail at Bow-street.

WAITER'S "LOAN."

"I don't, your Worship, wish to go away or leave the country. All I ask is that I may be placed somewhere where I can be under special treatment. I am in terrible pain."

This was the pathetic appeal addressed from the dock at Bow-street yesterday by Mrs. Tewkesbury in the now well-known case in which she is charged with obtaining money by means of worth-

Mrs. Tewkesbury looked very ill as she almost staggered into the dock, and shortly afterwards a chair and a glass of water were provided for her, as she seemed about to faint.

"It is our misfortune to have here," said Mr. Muir, opening the case for the prosecution, "the person who is the less guilty of the two," and that being so, he continued, no opposition would be offered to the case being dealt with summarily.

Mrs. Tewkesbury was arrested in Paris on an extradition warrant, and the sums she is charged with obtaining by worthless cheques are:—

Mrs. Tewkesbury's methods in getting cheques

She owed 420 for furniture, bought in June, and

MARIE DERVAL MYSTERY.

Now Believed That Dead Woman Was Once Mrs. Cushing's Maid.

Who was "Marie Derval"? The question still remains unanswered, but from certain facts which came to light yesterday the Daily Mirror is able to state that the dead woman will in all probability prove to have been Mrs. Cushing's maid.

In spite of her evident determination to cover all traces of her personality, certain articles, notably the purse and penknife, indubitably connect her with Mrs. Cushing.

It has further transpired that a gentleman believed to be Mr. John P. Cushing has been in London for some days, but is desirous of remaining in the background.

The photograph of "Marie Derval" was shown yesterday to a gentleman whose evidence it was hoped might assist in solving the mystery. He stated to the Daily Mirror, however, that, while certain features were like those of an American woman who resided in London some four years ago, it was well-nigh impossible to establish a complete recognition.

Apart from this evidence, inquiries are being made in Paris and London, and there are strong reasons for supposing that within a few hours the mystery will be completely cleared up.

THE INCOMETAX.

Last Day for Claiming an Abatement of the Burden.

SOME QUEER ANOMALIES

To-day is the last opportunity for claiming abatement of income-tax. If your income is less than £700 per annum it behoves you to bestir yourself. You should make your application to the Inland Revenue people at Somerset House, and your application must be in before noon.

Few people are aware how many reasons there are for claiming abatement. If your income does not exceed £160 you are altogether exempt.

If it does not exceed £400, £160 is exempt.

If you are engaged in business you are allowed to deduct the necessary expenses from your gross income, unless you are on salary and your expenses are paid by your employer.

For instance, if you are a commercial traveller, and your travelling expenses are paid by your firm, you cannot claim them.

Bribes May Be Deducted.

But if you are an author collecting material for a book you are entitled to deduct expenses such as fares, etc., involved in getting your material. But the commercial traveller has often to dis-tribute little bribes to oil the wheels. An advertise-ment contractor must give little luncheons in order to bring in business. The expense of these may be deducted.

Sometimes curious claims are made which are not allowed. A man who could only get to his office by walking or driving had an accident which incapacitated him from walking. He had to take a cab every day, and claimed to deduct about £100 on this account. He was not allowed to. The answer he got was that he should change his house, and live close to his business. Once a clerk claimed to deduct the amount he paid yearly on silk hats which his employers insisted he should wear. This claim was not allowed.

Rule of Husband and Wife.

Husband and wife are assessed together. If you earn £400 and your wife £350, for instance, you cannot claim an abatement at all, for your joint income is more than £700.

On incomes derived from stocks and shares you pay on each separate year's income. On a voluntary allowance you do not pay at all.

Mr. Petrival Clark, for the -prosecution, said Julers had been only a short time at the monastery. When the girl refused to accompany him to the monastery he picked her up and carried her into a field. She sustained a black eye and other injuries, and though it was not suggested that Julers gave her any deliberate blows he undoubtedly roughly used her.

Mr. Clark added that he was informed that when the accused had served his sentence steps would be taken to send him out of the country. It was suggested by the defence that Julers was not entirely responsible for his actions, but the prison doctor declined to say he was insame. He had written to the Prior a pathetic letter in which he said his offence was due to a sudden impulse. Eventually he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment. ____

of Stepney had some interesting reminiscences to give concerning the days when he was a prison chaplain. He was more concerned, he said, as to the future of women prisoners than men. It was a trial to deal with them, for it was much harder for a woman to redeem herself than a man. "Most women prisoners," continued the Bishop, "I have had to deal with are depressed and despairing, but I remember one who was very different. On entering her cell I was met with this remark: 'Oh, here is the inevitable reverend gentlemant I do not intend to pay the slightest attention to anything you say-I."

CHINESE VISIT TO THE LAW COURTS

High Honour Conferred on Mr. Mandarin Grantham.

COLLOQUY IN COURT.

In the following account of our Chinese visitors' doings of yesterday it has been felt that the events recorded should be described in the politeness of phrase in speaking of others and the modest self-depreciation for which the Far East is so justly admirable.

admirable.

Attended by an enormous and high-born retinue, their Excellencies Li Sheng To and Shang Ke Heng, the commissioners of the Son of Heaven and Potentate of the Middle Kingdom, otherwise the Emperor of China, graciously condescended to visit and inspect some of our insignificant and unworthy institutions yesterday.

In their great wisdom they have been pleased to signify that certain things, however mean, may be conducive through observation to enlarging their magnificent stock of knowledge. Therefore they have designed-to look upon things utterly beneath their exalted notice.

Compliments with a Judge.

Compliments with a Judge,

Their pleasure was to begin with the despicable Law Courts, in a miserable corridor of which one of our mandarins of the second rank, Mr. Justice Grantham, made suitable obeisance to them.

He then conducted them to the shabby bench of his own hovel-like court, and humbly pointed out to them its base deficiencies.

The mighty commissioners and the enormous and high-born retinue were accommodated with six inefficient chairs on the left hand of the Judge.

To him, through their learned interpreter, Tso Ping Ling, they addressed gracious and well-bred words, the purport of which there is reason for one humbly to believe was as follows:—

"What is your honourable age? We are greatly charmed with the glory of your magnificent robes. Would that it had been our privilege to winess you assume your dread-inspiring black cap. How many criminals have you handed over to your executioner in your noble career? Where is your handled executioner? May he live for a thousand years."

The No. 1 Mandarin.

The No. 1 Mandarin.

The No, 1 Mandarin.

Having returned replies to these distinguished queries, the Judge explained that an ignoble jury was about to come to a middle-class decision about the unintelligent doings of a contemptible electric tramear. He then escorted the august visitors to the court of a mandarin of the first rank, the Lord Chief Justice, having first extolled the admirable virtues and splendours of the commissioners to their obddient and abased-servants sitting in court.

To their Excellencies were introduced the Lord Chief Justice, and his assessor mandarins, Mr. Justice Darling and Mr. Justice Bray.

Speaking in Chinese to Mr. Justice Darling, one of the omniscient commissioners is believed to have said:

SCIENCE IN DAILY LIFE.

ET us first decide what we mean by Science. To most of us that word probably suggests something which is done in laboratories, or that has electric wires attached to it: something which bald-headed old bores mumble over in dusty lecture-rooms to a small audience of spectacled enthusiasts.

But that is only one aspect of Science, its least important aspect. We have narrowed the meaning of this splendid word until we have almost forgotten that it has any wider sense.

Science is just Knowledge, just knowing about things. A baker needs science just as badly as Lord Kelvin needed it—not so much science, it is true, but enough to enable him to bake good bread.

to bake good bread.

There are always two ways of doing things.
One is the scientific way, the "knowing" way.
The other is the "rule of thumb way," doing it without thinking, without knowing why.
Often the latter way is successful for a long time: occasionally, all the time. Many people have lived all their lives by certain rules which they learned from their parents, and have died without ever troubling to wonder whether these rules were sensible or not.
That sort of ancestor-worship was all very well in the Sleepy Ages. It saved trouble. It produced a race of nice, smooth-faced people with never a wrinkle on their placid brows:

produced a race of nice, smooth-faced people with never a wrinkle on their placid brows; you see some left in country-places still.

But now the World is awake and tremendously active. It refuses to take anything for granted. It is only the active-minded people whom it wants. Science (that is, knowing "how" and, above all, "why") is absolutely and, above all, "why") is absolutely

"how" and, above an, why / necessary,
A book has just been published called "Science in Public Affairs" (Allen, Charing Cross-road, bs.), to which Mr. Haldane, the new Minister for War, wrote a preface. He says very truly: "We are learning the necessity of clear thinking at the start." "Clear thinking"—that is a good definition of "Science," too.

In this book various writers show how necessary clear thinking is if we are to have towns and cities fit to live in; economical and efficient government; useful education; and so on. We have first got to think clearly what we want education to do or our towns to be like, and then to reckon up the best means of getting what we want.

Hitherto we have thought very little. We have just blundered on and muddled through. That is how we have carried on our public business, and that is how most of us have con-ducted our private affairs.

ducted our private affairs.

Why are there so many incompetent people, helpless people who never do anything well, who never learn better, who are "more trouble than they are worth." The reason is simple. They never do any clear thinking.

Before you begin on any job, give up a few minutes to thinking about it. Make up your mind exactly what you want to do and see if you are going the right way about it. Very likely you will hit upon some improved manner of doing it. That is the way all great inventions have come about.

The unscientific man who never thinks clearly is the man who builds houses on mud, breaks a door open instead of picking the clearly is the man who builds houses on mud, breaks a door open instead of picking the lock, looks for a gas escape with a lighted candle, rushes to the station in a hurry and gets into the wrong train, makes himself ill by eating food which he ought to know would disagree with him, spoils his children by foolish indulgence, and finally meets with an accidental death because he didn't know the gun was loaded! gun was loaded!

If you are not one of the clear thinkers already, begin to be one now. You will find it pay you every hour of the day. H. H. F.

A THOUGHT FOR TO-DAY.

We have to be defeated in order to succeed. Most of us spend half our lives in fighting for things that would only destroy us if we got them. A man who has never been defeated is usually a man who has been ruined.—James Lane Allen.

THIS MORNING'S GOSSIP.

IVIL List pensions, especially when they are granted to literary people, do not generally permit the recipients to live in any very magnificent manner, and one is always sorry to see for this and for other reasons that a writer of talent has to apply for one. It is said that Mr. John Davidson's friends are trying to secure a grant for him. I do not know if this is indeed the case, but if it is no one could be more deserving of such help than Mr. Davidson, who spent the greater part of his youth in a lonely and courageous struggle against obscurity and poverty in London

The fruit of that struggle you may find in his Fleet-street cologues, that deal with such very hard and "stony-hearted" pastures. It is, by the way, curious that another contemporary poet, Mr. William Watson, also received a pension from the Civil List. For the rest, it is rather melancholy to glance through the names of those who have benefited in this way. There they all are—widows of literary men, sisters, brothers, children of men some of whose names are famous, yet their relatives

Headington Hill Hall belongs to Mr. George Morrell, who was for some years member for the Woodstock Division of Oxfordshire, but lost his seat at the last election. Mr. and Mrs. Morrell have long been known in Oxford, and the dinners and garden-parties at Headington will be much missed, if they do in fact decide to leave the place for a time. They have another house, much smaller, but very pretty, at Streatley, on the river.

What was said here the other day about the "laws of imitation" has been remarkably illustrated by the case of "Measure for Measure," which has just been revived at the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester. That makes the third revival of the play which has been attempted during the last few weeks. And yet, just before this managerial mania for producing it, most people had probably never read it, and even dramatic critics, many of them, had almost forgotten the plot. It was the Oxford Union Dramatic Society that started this series of revivals, which has been almost as inexplicable as Any dog found in unwashed and unkempt condition, with the owner's name on collar, should be taken and the owner fined, and, if this occurs more than three times, the owner should not be allowed to keep a dog for a certain period—say, a year.

Many poor people keep dogs they cannot really afford to keep properly, and if the tax were increased they would be obliged to part with them. To my mind this would be a great blessing. Surely anything and everything ought to be dome to stamp out the awful plague of hydrophobia.

Mellis Rectory, Eye, Suffolk. W. C. LEEPER.

Your correspondents seem almost unanimous in their condemnation of the dog. It is a revelation to me to find that this animal is such an abomination, and if all the information from your correspondents is correct, surely doubling the tax would be a very inefficient remedy. Many people will undoubtedly pay the extra amount and keep their pets "with loathsome habits." Surely an Act of Pazilament should be at once brought forward for the externiation of such pests.

And yet what does a burglar fear more than electric bells, patent alarms, and human agencies for his detection? What does many a lonely housewife find cheers her during the absence of her husband? Who is the children's friend, and ofttimes their protector? How many people owe their lives to a four-footed agency?

WORK FOR ITS OWN SAKE.

WORK FOR ITS OWN SAKE.

Your correspondent, Ir. J. Swale, does not seem to understand the elementary principle of that desire for work which is shown by countless men and women (including the omnibus-driver in question) who have no need to work for a living.

Every man, and every woman, too, is entitled to work. Work is one of the greatest things in the world, because through its means, more than any other, the formation of character is ensured. Those who feel that the onus of making character is laid upon them know that to develop character labour is essential.

APRIL 3.—There is no reason why small gardens should not be laid out in an original manner. An original garden is always interesting. For instance, few gardens contain ponds, though a small piece of water, naturally constructed, can be made very pretty if planted with suitable subjects, such as the common yellow water flag, the gay marsh marigolds, the splendid Japanese rises, the "monkey flower," the water forget-me-not. And then there are the water lilies. These fascinating plants are quite easy to grow, and Matthew Arnold, by the way, used to have £250 a year from the Civil List, which was pretty good as pensions go. When Arnold died, Lady Burton, the wife of the translator of "The Arabian Nights," made an attempt, characteristic of her complete ignorance of the usages of the world, to get this sum transferred to her husband. She telegraphed "Give Burton Arnold's pension" to the Prime Minister, who, of course, paid no attention to so summary a piece of advice.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has joined the crowd of those who advocate a reform in spelling, and want to reduce the inconsistencies of our present use to some more logical rule. It is curious, by the way, that just such an attempt as his has recently been made in France, where so much attention is paid to linguistic matters. There was a kind of commission appointed last year by the Academy there to draw up a report on the reform of spelling.

"Sue, whatever are you doing here, by yourself, In the dark? Why are you not in bed?

Milly ran into the room, and the sudden shock of her sister's entrance made Susan drop the laudanum bottle. It fell with a crash to the ground, and as it fell her dress was stained with the thick, and as it fell her dress was stained with the thick, brown fluid, and the heavy smell of the poison seemed to rise and fill the room.

"What a fright you've given me, Milly," she cried, feeling that she must not let the young girl realise what she had been, about to do. Oh, at all costs she must keep the knowledge from her sister. For Susan was beginning to feel ashamed of herself now, and to realise that she had been preserved by Millicent's sudden entrance from committing a grave and grievous crime.

She must have been mad, she thought, to want to take her own life—mad and wicked—for it is allowable to no one to hasten on their death hour. They must wait with what patience they can muster the hour of the soul's release.

"I have just come back from Agnes's bridgeparty," remarked Milly. "I am sorry if I startled you, dear."

you, dear."

She switched on the electric light; then stared with puzzled eyes at Susan. For what had her sister been doing all alone in the dark? She noticed the broken bottle and the brown stains noticed the broken bottle and the brown stains upon Susan's gown.

"Oh, yes, you've been playing bridge at Agnes's, of course. I had forgotten you were there."

Susan recollected as she spoke that it had been arranged that Milly should go and play bridge at their elder sister's house, Lady Agnes Venning, who had married a wealthy stockbroker some years back, and lived in Portman-square. Milly must have just got back from the bridge-party, and most likely been told by the maid that her sister had already returned from Berkshire House.

"Sue, what's the matter with you?" Milly walked up to her sister and put her arms about the trembling, shaking woman. She couldn't understand Susan's looks or manner; she was puzzled and a little afraid.

"Yve got a dreadful toothache—oh, a perfectly understand Susan's looks or manner; she was puzzled and a little afrail.

"I've got a dreadful toothache—oh, a perfectly agonising one," answered Susan, lying boldly.
"I was just about to rub a little laudanum on my cheek when your sudden dash into the room startled me so much that I dropped the bottle, Millicent. And now I can't get any more to-night."

She smiled faintly as she said the last words, aware that she never wanted to see a bottle of laudanum again. It would remind her too terribly of the crime she had contemplated.
"Laudanum," Milly stooped down and picked up the broken bottle. Then helf face grew grave and concerned. "It's poison, isn't it's she asked, nervously. "Poison?"

"Yes," returned Susan, softly, "and a very deadly poison, too. But there, don't let's talk any more about my toothache, or the wretched drug. Tell me if you have had a pleasant evening. Robert was to be one of the bridge players, wasn't he?"

Robert was to be one of the bridge players, wasn'the?"

"Yes, he was there; I cut him for my partner, as it happened," Millicent answered slowly. "But I don't know, Sue, if it does me much good seeing him. I don't believe he will ever care for anybody as he cares for you. Sometimes I think he will love you to the day of his death."

She sighed rather hopelessly. "Why, to-night, he could talk of no one else," are continued, "and it will be the same when I meet him to-morrow at Hurlingham, for I told him we were going to be there, and he said he would meet us about five. Why, what's the matter?"

She turned on her sister, horribly -darmed by the way Susan had suddenly begun to laugh—such vague, foolish laughter; also why did her blue eyes look so wild and distraught; why did she shiver and shake so?

"Sue, my darling, dearest Sue! What is the matter?" she inquired anxiously. "Don't laugh in this strange way. Sue, aren't you well?"

"Oh, yes, I am well-quite well now," answered Susan, struggling against a sudden attack of hysteria. "Do you know, Milly, I nearly swallowed that laudanum?" she went on weakly. "And then there would have been no Hurlingham for you to-morrow, or for me either. Instead, you might have been choosing black dresses and helping to comfort Paul for my decease. Poor Paul, he would have felit it dreadfully, wouldn't he?"

She began to laugh wildly, and to rock her slender body backwards, and forwards—to clench

She began to laugh wildly, and to rock he slender body backwards and forwards—to clench and unclench her thin white hands.

"You nearly swallowed the laudanum?" exclaimed Milly with a gas pof bewildered dismay. "Oh, Sue, how could you think of doing anything so wicked?"

So wicked?"

She paused, and suddenly flung her arms about her sister, straining her closely to her.

"My darling—my sweet—I know you are unhappy," she whispered after a long pause. "But Paul isn't worth the sacrifice of your precious life. I might as well kill myself because of Robert."

Susan made no answer, but went on laughing and sobbing alternately, whist Milly did her best to soothe and compose her sister. She would not summon Susan's maid for fear of what the latter might suspect, but did her best by herself to cope with the difficult and painful situation.

At last, after a long time, she succeeded in

At last, after a long time, she succeeded in getting Susan undressed and then to bed, and she was rewarded for her pains and trouble by watching her sister sink into a deep and apparently dreamless sleep.

"Thank God that I got back when I did," she murmured. "Oh, thank God."

She bent down and pressed a light kiss on Susan's forchead.

The sleeper stirred, and murmured Henrietta's name half under her breath—then came a tangle of words.

Milly, leaning over her, listening intently, gained a sudden knowledge of the truth. For, in her sleep, Susan, generally so cold and self-contained, was betraying herself, babbling jealously of Henrietta, and her desire to be loved by Paul.

A bright sparkle of angry resentment lit up Milly's eyes, and her brow wrinkled in a frown. Then she moved away from the bedside and began to pace up and down the long room, a look of singular determination creeping over her youthful face—of stern resolve.

Half an hour later she was facing her brotherina haw in the hall, for, with ears painfully alert, she had heard Chester let himself in with his latchkey, and had stolen downstairs to meet him, walk-ing very softly, so as to avoid disturbing the slumbering house.

It was close on the dawn. Pale grey light was streaming through a window up the staircase, and Chester started a little when he saw his sister-in-

Chester started a little when he saw his sister-inlaw.

She looked so spectral in her white, evening dress, and what had she come down to talk to him about? Could anything be wrong with Susan?
What could be the trouble?

"Millicent." He came forward, and the girl noticed how pale and haggard he looked. She was pale, too, for the matter of that, and her shining hair was ruffled and untidy.

"Is anything the matter?" he asked. There was a note of keen anxiety in his voice.

"No, nothing is the matter," returned Milly quietly. "But I want to speak to you for a few moments all the same, Paul."

"At this hour?" murmured the man. "Are you aware how late it is?"

"Perfectly," returned Milly steadily. "But what I have got to say to you must be said at once."

"Perfectly," returned Milly steadily. "But what I have got to say to you must be said at once."

She led the way as she spoke into the dining-room, and here, in the pale grey of the dawn, she and Chester confronted each other.

"What I've got to tell you is about Susan," Millicent began, "and it is very serious, Paul. Do you know, if I had not come back from Agnes's earlier than I intended, and gone straight up to Sue's room, that she would have been dead by now—dead?"

"Dead?" exclaimed Chester, stepping back and gazing at Millicent with horrified eyes. "For heaven's sake, explain yourself, child! Tell me what you mean!"

"I mean this," retorted Milly slowly. "Susan was on the point of poisoning herself with laudanum when I entered her bedroom a few hours back."

"My God." Chester put his hand to his forehead and leant back against the wall; then he gazed at his sister-in-law with dilated eyes.

"Why should she wish to take her own life?" he muttered hoarsely. "Why?"

Milly looked at him coldly.
"Because her married life is such a miserable one, I suppose," she answered in low tones. "I don't know of any other reason."

"I do," returned Chester; then his face hardened. "What is she doing now," he asked, "this unhappy wife of mine?"
"She's asleep," murmured the girl. Then she raised appealing eyes. "You must never let Sue know," she said, "that I've told you she thought of committing suicide or she would never forgive me. Peromise not to tell her, Paul. Respect my confidence, I implore you."

He nodded his head, then looked Milly straight-in the eyes.
"What are we going to do, Susan and myself,"

He nodded his head, then looked annly straight in the eyes.

"What are we going to do, Susan and myself," he asked, "in the years stretching out ahead? Do you think I can ever forget that Sue is wretchedly unhappy? That she ever thought of killing herself, poor girl, and I'm sick of life, too—my God, I am!"

am!?

He sank down on one of the leather chairs and covered his face with his hands.

"Curse our marriage laws—our whole social system," he multered between his teeth. "For we might both be happy—Susan and myself—if we had our freedom. But as it is—"

He paused and did not finish the sentence.
"As it is," repeated Milly, her face crimsoning, "my poor sister is tied to a man who has no idea of the duty he owes his wife, but spends his time dreaming about another woman—a married woman."

dreaming about another woman—a married woman."

She flounced to the door-and-banged-it-sharply-behind her. She was half beside herself with rage and worry; as impulsive as the rest of her family; as heedless.

Chester, left alone, sighed heavily.

"Poor Susan, has it come to this with us both?" he murmured. "I open my arms to Henrietta, and you seek the colder embrace of death."

He drew his hand across his twitching forehead, then, yielding to a sudden idea, took his way to his wife's room.

A MARVELLOUS FAMILY RECORD OF CURES

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER, GRANDMOTHER, MOTHER AND CHILD MADE WELL BY

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are invaluable for the ailments of both youth and advanced age, has been proved repeatedly in these columns; the latest and most striking evidence of this is supplied by one Sunderland 'family, four generations of which gladly testify to the fact that they have been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

The Great-Grandmother cured by DR. WILLIAMS" PINK PILLS.

Mrs. Isabella Foster, 3, Brady-street, Pallion, Sunderland, states: "At the age of seventy-four I find it a great comfort to be surrounded by my children, grand-children, and great-grand-children. A few months ago, however, after nursing my husband during an illness, I grew very nervous. Food disagreed with me and gave me terrible pains in the chest. I had sickly feelings and bilious headaches. My strength gradually gave way under these attacks. Then my daughter bought me some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I found that I could digest food. I felt brighter and stronger and free from pains. I am sure my years will be prolonged through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

The Grandmother cured by DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

"I have brought up a family of nine children," states Mrs. Elizabeth Wigham, 51, Peacock-street West, Pallion, Sunderland, "and at the age of forty-eight suffered from chronic Indigestion. Food became distasteful; after meals I had sharp shooting pains with attacks of dizziness so bad that I had to lie down. I felt dull and languid, yet could not sleep properly at night. Biliousness and spasms sometimes made me quite helpless. After trying different medicines without relief, a 'good Samaritan' insisted on my taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I did so, and very soon I could eat without discomfort and my appetite returned. I enjoyed meals without fear of dizziness or headaches, and felt ten years younger. My domestic duties are a pleasure now, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

The Mother cured by DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

"Since my last child was born," explained Mrs. Levison, aged twenty-six, of 27, Percival-street, Sunderland, "I have suffered continually from depression of spirits and languidness, feeling so weak that I have been compelled to rest for hours together. Distress and fulness after meals, with frequent bilious attacks and violent sickness, often readered me helplage and miserable.

with frequent bilious attacks and violent sickness, often rendered me helpless and miserable.

"I tried all sorts of remedies to no effect, but being recommended to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, I did so. Very soon I could attend to the house without feeling exhausted. My spirits were brighter and I felt ready to eat at meal times. All signs of biliousness and sickness disappeared, and my husband, who had been extremely anxious about me, was delighted at the great change.

The Child Gured by DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

"This does not end the praise I am able to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for my little girl began to all, as children do, not long ago. On first noticing this, I gave her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, when she revived and was as bright and lively as any child. A does of the pills now and then gives her strength and acts as a splendid tonic to the system."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a silent guardian of the health of households. Thousands of families can tell of cures effected in cases of fammiles, Indigestion, Bile, Consumption, Eczama, Rheumatism, Mas. Levisor's Child, Indigestion, Bile, Consumption, Eczama, Rheumatism, Juweile Aliments Cured. Sciatica, Kidney Disease, St. Vitus' Dance, Neuralgia, Juweile Aliments Cured. In Spite of Investors' Mistrust of Government, Prices Advance.

RUSSIA'S NEW LOAN.

CAPEL COURT, Tuesday Evening.-Very decided improvement has been seen on the Stock Exchange to-day. Prices are advancing, and, what is more to the point, they are advancing in spite of there being next to no business. It is sentimental levelling up on the improvement in the money and political situation. There can be no doubt that, were it not for the utter mistrust of the Govern-ment and what it is likely to do in the way of interference with investors, there would be a pro-nounced rise in values and a considerable outburst of activity.

Of-course, everybody is talking about the Russian loan. It seems to be expected to amount to 250,000,000, with about £20,000,000 in Paris and the rest elsewhere. In order to help to maintain values it is said that the bonds placed in Paris will not be good delivery in other centres. To-day Russians were rather dull, for people are selling out of some of the older issues apparently, to buy the coming new issue, which will be cheaper.

FOREIGN BOURSES' GOOD TONE.

FÖREIGN BOURSES' GOOD TONE.

The improvement in the political situation has been reflected by the Foreign bourses, especially now that the Paris settlement is out of the way. There is a good tone also for Peruvian descriptions and for the Central American group, with a variety of sanguine rumours circulating, with probably about as little foundation for them as usual. The copper share group is notably strong on the great shortage of the metal as shown by the fortnightly statistics published yesterday.

There was a little nervousness about the labour situation on the North-Eastern Railway, and the attitude of the men causes selling of North-Eastern stock. Other securities are firm. But there is not stock. Other securities are firm. But there is not much public buying of Home Rails, for undoubtedly the attitude of the Labour Party is feared. And although the yield to investors on Home Rails is not high enough to excite rapacity, yet there is a fear that the Government may hamper the companies.

HOME RAIL GOOD TRAFFICS.

HOME RAIL GOOD TRAFFICS.

Fortunately traffics are improving in unnistakable fashion, and the companies will be able to put a good deal of money into the roads, and so be the better enabled to face eventualities. The Great Eastern had a splendid traffic to-day, and although the South-Eastern result was a poor one, it did not include the usual extra revenue incidental to the end of the month.

In spite of the coal strike having commenced in America, the American market was notably strong, for the strike only proves to be partial, and not so bad as was feared.

In the Canadian Railway group there seems to be a good deal of selling of Grand Trunks, perhaps because the traffic to-morrow is expected to be a poorish one. On the other hand, the Foreign Railway group seems quite to have recovered from be a poorish one. On the other hand, the Foreign Railway group seems quite to have recovered from its depression. The harvest traffics in Argentina and sanguine traffic expectations in Brazil keep those two groups very good. And the good traffic for the Mexican Railway, coupled with the ex-pectation of a satisfactory dividend next week, certainly make the market in Mexican Rails a better

COMING BREWERY AMALGAMATION

Although nothing definite was known, there were rumours about that the Chilian meeting of the nitrate producers was about to effect an arrangement to continue the combination, and this had a decidedly firming influence on nitrate shares. In the brewery world the talk of the coming amalgamation of Allsopps with Salts and the Burton Brewery helped Allsopp stocks. There were several other interesting features, notably the strength of Bell's Asbestos on the story that the company had sold a portion of its property for a very substantial sum.

stantial sum. At first the Kaffir market was very good, but, just as was the case yesterday, the absence of business and uncertainty as to how the Rand labour question would shape quite offset such minor good points as the settlement of the Natal difficulty. The market accordingly closed in a different mood to what it opened. But other mining sections, or at least the leading sections, like Westralians and West Africans, were not at all bad.

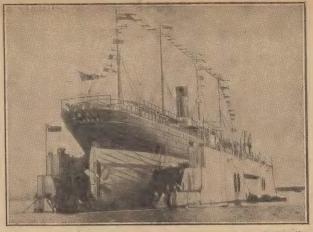

NEW MOTOR-OMNIBUS ISSUE

NEW MOTOR-OMNIBUS ISSUE.

To acquire 200 motor-omnibuses and provide for the necessary garages and working capital, the London Standard Motor Omnibus Company, Limited, invites public subscriptions of £250,000. It is proposed to run the omnibuses in London, and the routes already selected as suitable and likely to prove remunerative are from Kensington to Archway Tavern, via Piccadilly, and Tottenham Court-road; from Tooting and Streatham to Camden Town; from Shepherd's Bush to Albert Docks; from Cricklewood to London Bridge; and from Hammersmith to the City.

The company claims to have secured the delivery of ten omnibuses in April, fifteen in May, and thereafter twenty every month.

Built to lift 8,500 tons, the floating dry dock at Durban can accommodate the largest steamers using that South African port. The Kent, photographed in the dock, is a vessel of 5,484 tons, drawing over twenty-eight foot of water.—(Photograph by courtesy of the "Syren.")

HRH PRINCESS IMP.

Cats Who Live in a Villa of Their Own at Windson,

THE "ROYAL" DIET.

Probably the only cat in the world who possesses a private address and letter-box is H.R.H. Princess Imp, Seymour Lodge, Windsor.

The Windsor postman delivers a letter to the above address on his morning round every day, and if perchance a day should pass without bringing her usual correspondence, her royal highness sulks in her parlour and refuses to be comforted, for she dearly loves the excitement of tearing her letters to shreds.

Princess Imp belongs to H.R.H. Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, is a perfect specimen of the rare and bewitching "unmarked Chinchilla," and dwells with her family at Seymour Lodge, a dainty little two-storied villa in the grounds of a damly little worsterled had in the grounds of Cumberland Lodge. Over the front door, which leads into a little garden with gravelled walks, is a crown, surmounted by the letters "V. S. H.," Princess Victoria's monogram.

KITTENS' PLAYROOM.

From the roof of the front parlour hang little coloured gelatine balls, filled with peas, with which the kittens delight to play, and with which their royal mother diverts herself in less serious moments. The windows are hung with muslin curtains tied-fack with blue ribbons, and a staircase leads up to the first floor, on which are the dining-rooms and bedrooms. Each cat has its own little wooden bed, with its full complement of sheets, blankets, quilt, and bedding necessary for the repose of a royal net.

quilt, and bedding necessary for the repose-of a royal pet.
Close by dwells Prince Puck III., a bachelor "chinchilla," in a mansion overlooking the "home of the Blue Ladies," five maiden Persians, who inhabit separate flats. Here the windows are hung with muslin curtains, tied up with bows of pink and green.

In his solitary home Prince Puck makes the night beautiful with his love-lorn serenading of the princesses, Venus, Viola, Mary, and Chela. Prince Togo, the favourite cat of Prince Christian, is less susceptible, his one "bête noir" being photographers, to whom he has the most unaccountable aversion. After rising in the morning their highnesses partake of a light breakfast of rice and fresh fish, after which they take nothing till late dinner, at which raw meat and new milk figure prominently on the menu.

RAILWAY SERVANTS BLAMED FOR COLLISION.

"I do not attempt to apportion the blame, but had any one of the men performed his duty in the proper manner, the collision would not have occurred. The two signalmen had been on duty for an hour and a half and the driver and fireman of the light engine for two hours and a half at the time of the accident."

This is an extract from Colonel Yorke's report on the collision which occurred last December on the Caledonian Railway, when fourteen passengers and three railway servants were injured,

FORTUNE FROM PILLS.

How a Doctor's Gift to a Druggist Brought £1,311,000.

The money side of the well-known remedy, Pink Pills for Pale People, is interestingly shown by the will of the late George Taylor Fulford, the maker of this patent medicine. He has left $1,811,000, of which £105,961 is estate in the United Kingdom.

Ringdom.

Twenty years ago he kept a small chemist's shop in Brookville, a willage on the St. Lawrence River. Brookville has now grown to a thriving manufacturing town, enduring with prosperous complacency the nickame of "Pill City," for Mr. Fulford made it one of the chief centres of the world's pill-making industria.

it one of the enter centres of the world's plantames industry.

In his early days Mr. Fulford knew a country doctor who was in the habit of making up for his patients an iron pill with a pink coating. The coating served the double purpose of preventing the iron from discolouring the teeth and for making the pill palatable.

The doctor's patients had firm faith in the merit of his pills, and he was quite unable to cope with the demand; so he sent the recipe to Mr. Fulford, and directed his patients to that druggist's shop.

Mr. Fulford soon recognised that the pill was a sound business asset, and determined to advertise it.

He began with handbills, and as his means permitted extended his advertising to the newspapers. The fame of Pink Pills for Pale People—one of the happiest alliterative efforts in history—spread. There were songs about Pink Pills, and jokes about Pale Pills for Pink People. And all the while Mr. Fulford was simply coining money. He spent thousands of pounds a year in advertising, and all the money came back to him many times over in offers for pills.

Within five years of his first advertising efforts Mr. Fulford was a rich man, even in the modern meaning of the word.

In the height of his prosperity he was fatally injured in a motor-car accident.

Seen by the Daily Mirror yesterday, Mr. Wise begged to send his thanks to the readers who have assisted him through these columns.

For eight years Mr. Wise has been unable to follow his trade as a carpenter and joiner, owing to serious attacks of locomotor ataxy, which have left him without the use of his legs.

"When I get the chair," said Mr. Wise, "I shall be able to get round the streets and sell copies of the Daily Mirror. This will enable me to earn a few shillings weekly—the first for eight years."

Mr. Pink, the senior curate of the parish, whose letter to the Daily Mirror, on March 24, first drew attention to the case, has undertaken to obtain Mr. Wise's chair and to see him safely started on his new undertaking.

The two last contributions were £1 1s, from the Lord Mayor—which was obtained by Mrs. de Courcy Laffan—and 8s, from A. Jenner, Esq., Walmer House,

The Way to Rear Strong and Healthy Children

Article No. 3.

In previous articles we have referred to various types of infant foods, and we now propose to dis-cuss those made with "dried" or preserved milks. There is a very grave objection to all such foods owing to the fact that, to quote a distinguished children's doctor, milk so prepared "is destitute of the antiscorbutic (scurvy-preventing) element, whatever it may be, that undoubtedly exists in fresh milk.' That the heating of milk necessary to dry it does change its character can be readily proved by the use of proper tests, and although children may for a time appear to thrive on dried milk foods, in many cases their use is followed sooner or later by scurvy or rickets. In that well-known and useful book, "Our Baby," the author says: "The now very general use of peptonised, sterilised, or otherwise prepared milks, has caused the disease known as infantile scurvy to be far more common than formerly, and in contradistinction to rickets, it is found more amongst the well-to-do than the poor."

PLEASE NOTE THIS

"Savory and Moore's Best Food for Infants and Invalids' does not contain any "dried" or preserved milk and children fed upon it are free from rickets and scurvy. Not only so, but they are also singularly free from diarrhoa and constipation, and the period of teething is got through with ease and comfort. Some of the most striking benefits arising from the use of "Savory and Moore's Best Food" are in cases where other foods have been tried with unsatisfactory results. In cases of malnutrition and wasting an almost immediate improvement has been visible when "the use of "Savory and Moore's Best Food" has been commenced. That "Savory and Moore's Best Food" does possess very remarkable and conspicuous merits is proved by the fact that it is used in the Royal Nurseries of most European Courts; that during the last half-century thousands of letters of grateful thanks have been received by its manufacturers; that the children and grand-childeren of those brought up upon it are, in their turn, being fed upon it to-day,

SOME INTERESTING AND BEAUTIFUL ROOMS.

HAPPY THOUGHTS FOR HOUSE ADORNMENT.

CIGAR BOXES USED AS PANELLING FOR A DRAWING-ROOM.

BY CONSTANCE BEERBOHM.

Now that so many of us have begun to redecorate and set our houses in order, generally speaking, why should we not invest at least our drawingrooms, bedrooms, and boudoirs-the more intimate among our rooms, in a word-with a certain sen

It was, I think, the Dowager Countess of Kenmare who first started the idea of taking a flower mare who first statted the idea of taking a nower as a model from which to work for her colour scheme. She chose the forget-me-not, and her thought was the happiest. Distemper skilfully applied over a lining paper of the same colour has a more handsome effect—I quote the words of a well-known painter—than plain paper, of however fine quality; and Lady Kenmare, then, at Killarney, had a drawing-room distempered the brightest of forget-me-not blue, and another room leading out of it was of the colour of the soft green leaf of the flower.

The effect, surprisingly good, was reproduced by another lady living in Sloane-street, to the admiration of all beholders. Nothing, indeed, could have been prettier than the blend of the two colours. Then to Lady Henry Somerset occurred an equally happy idea when she chose a palm from which to work down in a green scheme. A huge palm was placed in the middle of her drawing-room; the carpet laid down was of rather a lighter, softer shade, and the walls of a yet paler one. The green chintz that covered the furniture was of the lightest shade of all. Never was seen so reposeful a room.

Sunlight on a Dull Day.

Lady Bective quite recently had a sitting-room painted pure white, and chose as its only decora-tion grey bay-trees. The effect is beautiful. Then Mrs. Tree, known for her taste in house de-coration, chanced on a daffodil, and had a country drawing-room, which looked on to a lawn, distem-pered the fullest, gayest yellow, whilst her hang-ings were of lightest, gayest green. Even on a dull day there was an effect of sunlight in that room.

Violet is a cold colour, and must not be chosen for a north room. But for a south room I can

DR. JONES LINEEL LINIMENT.

Dr. G. H. JONES, the eminent Surgeon-Dentist, Gt. Russell Mansions, London, writes:—"I consider LINEEL LINIMENT a wonderful antidote for pain. I have used successful results, and in obstinate, case where other means have failed to give re-lief." No more declayle testimony could pos-sibly be given. LINIMENT is the only effective cure for pain known (Adv.)

A green grass matting may be laid down on the floor, and it would be unusual to have the large pieces of furniture of American maple, the lines simple and severe, stained a soft silvery green. The window curtains may be of cretonne, figured muslin, or net, and the flowers strewn thereon may be clematis, violets, wistaria, or pansies.

A drawing-room I know which is much admired has a dado of dull gold, and above is painted dark purple. Another has a gold frieze and a plain paper of deep azalea crimson. Another, the pretitest of all, is hung with the softest terractita twill, and has a frieze of inlaid woods.

Yet another, panelled halfway up with brown wood, is papered with the dull gold covers taken off the tea-chests which come from China.

How To Treat White Walls.

Another original room has its walls panelled with the cedar wood, which is always of the finest, of cigar-boxes. It took the owner a long time to collect a sufficiency of boxes, but her men friends were good to her, and not only gave her their own cast-off ones, but asked their friends and friends' friends to do likewise.

The colour scheme of a young girl's bedroom that I know was suggested by a blush-rose, and another by a picotee, and are not rose and white always so pretty in combination for a colour scheme?

Before I have finished with the walls of a room.

scheme?

Before I have finished with the walls of a room I must hearken to the words of "Surrey Garden," Mrs. Earle, who cries aloud ever for white ones. "What suits the rose and titlip as a background ought to suit a pretty woman in her pretty clothes." Her bright idea 'Apropos of white walls is this: To cover the wall with coarse canvas and then distemper it white, so that variety may be given to temper it white, so that variety may be given to the surface.

She suggests, too, our following the example of the housewives in the old French chateaux of Touraine, and hanging our white walls between windows, behind a picture, over a chimney-piece, above a table or bookcase, with a small piece of good drapery or old leather. This form of decoration, a common one, by the way, in the Middle Ages, led to the employment of tapestry.

An original scheme has just been thought out by a clever actress, who lives in Adelphiterrace. Her walls she has painted white, and the woodwork in black, so that London smoke should attempt to wreak its worst upon it in vain. The late Aubrey Beardsley, I remember, had a room distempered in orange, and the woodwork, too, painted black.

NEWBURY SELECTIONS.

For the last day at Warwick the conditions could not have been more favourable, but the attendance was below the average. The incident that aroused most general interest was the appearance of a halfbrother to Lally—it was a two-year-old colt by Islington—Miss Hoyden. In a field of sixteen he

It was in the Grove Park Plate that the Miss Hoyden colf formed one of the two representatives of Captain F. Norester, the other heing Little Red Spinner colt. The Cherub, of whom rumour from Newmarket spoke well, enlisted the biggest following in the market, starting in chief demand at 4's, while Never Beat was second favourite at a point longer odds. The selection was good, as those two finished first and second, Thomaster of a length, Pau Onders being third, and Pet filly, who is half-sister to Denamy, fourth.

Elsey had three engaged in the Avon Welter Handicap, but he relied upon Oriel Window, who ran well in the race won by his stable-companion, Devereux, at Lincola. Quassia came in for most support, while Wise Lad and Castro had many adherents. The result was a triumph for backers, Quassia, wearing Lovebird gelding down in the last fifty yards, just sanching the verdict by a head Jolliffe, Russell's apprentice, rode a capital is second, but Madden's extra strength told at the finish.

Guy Middleton had shaped so weil for a mile in the 5-tiverpool Cup that he was well backed for the Swan Meadow Welter Plate, and in a field of ten closed as 21 to 10. Anong the runners, who last season gave Peck a deal of anxiety in training. Taking up the runting in the last furlong, Vasco won the race for Lord Kosebery. With most of the regular followers of racing holding themselves in reserve for the Newbury meeting to-day, there will probably be a capital attendance at the pic-ture-gule Berkshire fature. Many improvements have been made, one of which is the provious and an en-phase of a race can be seen.

In answer to a correspondent at Charlton, Oxford are using last year's boat, and are at present rowing with oars the blades of which are only five and a quarter inches in width. Cambridge have a new boat, built by Sims. The blades of their oars are kive and a half inches in sydidh.

THE BOATRACE.

A Quiet Day's Work on the Thames-Form Up to Date.

BY F. B. WILSON.

It's curious till one thinks a stride how reticent 'Varsity men are. On Monday'l tried to get the outcome of the 'Varsity Boatrace from more than one Cantab: failed. Why? Just for this reason. At the 'Varsity a "man in authority" admits one superior in England, and that superior, as, of course, it should be, the King.

as, of course, it should be, the King.

* *

Therefore they are reticent. Your trainer of either crew will tell you nothing or little, probably because he does not feel himself justified in doing so. Thence comes the deadlock. How to spot the winner, as Old Joe, of the racecourse, tells us, generally inaccurately, is quite easy. Thus Old Joe: but not the British public.

The work of the crews is, or has been, or both, most misleading. To start with, Oxford were certain winners; at present they look like losers by a couple of lengths at least. To compare times under the recent circumstances is useless. Syle, leg drive, and, shall start means, though it only has four letters—these are the things which win the Boatrace.

the things which win the Boatrace.

As the crew are present, a ford are a good deal the heavier side. The present is, can they pull their weight? No doubt I am prejudiced, but I think not.

Yesterday was a quiet day.

Yesterday was a quiet day.

Yesterday was a quiet day.

And a little racing; and, in the racing; and, in the racing, at least, of only favourites, but firm favourites, but firm favourites, barring one thing.

There is a theory, which may or may not be right, that the thirdbury is given to over-training his crew—that is to rowed. This year I don't believe a word of it, and, with the Cambridge crew, can shout back at the question—"Are we downhearted?"." Not?"
